Craig Kelly

ExxonMobil

Ambassador Kelly retired from the State Department in 2010 after over 25 years of service overseas and in Washington. As Principal Deputy Assistant Secretary of State, he was "chief operating officer" for policy and management in 34 countries from Canada to Chile. Ambassador Kelly focused heavily on economic and commercial relations in the region, and teamed with another senior official to negotiate the "Pathways to Prosperity in the Americas" program, a trade and development initiative involving 14 countries. He served as troubleshooter in several crises in the hemisphere, including during the aftermath of the coup in Honduras, where he had a lead role in brokering the accord that led to resolution of the crisis. He led the biannual migration talks with Cuba, and in February 2010 became the highest-level U.S. official in 15 years to visit Havana, where he met with leaders of civil society as well as the government.

From 2004 to 2007 Kelly served as U.S. Ambassador to Chile, where he was an active proponent of U.S. business, bilateral trade and investment and intellectual property rights. He worked with the Chilean government to launch the "American Academy of Science and Technology" in Santiago, dedicated to highlighting science cooperation between the two countries. He led his embassy team in negotiating the "Equal Opportunity Scholarships," which send 100 Chilean students per year to earn advanced degrees in science and technology in the United States. He worked closely with the Chilean government on UN issues in the Middle East and Asia as well as the Western Hemisphere, and hosted the President and First Lady during the APEC Leaders Meeting in Santiago in 2004. A strong proponent of sports diplomacy, Ambassador Kelly launched an official affiliate of Little League Baseball in Chile.

Ambassador Kelly was Executive Assistant to Secretary of State Colin Powell from March 2001 to June 2004. He supervised the Secretary's staff and joined the Secretary in all of his meetings with foreign leaders in Washington and in over 90 countries around the world. From 1999 to 2001, Kelly was chief of staff to Undersecretary of State for Political Affairs Thomas Pickering.

Ambassador Kelly has served in a variety of overseas posts. In Paris, he was chief of the political-military section, leading the embassy's work on NATO, arms control, Bosnia and nuclear issues. He was an election observer for the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe in Bosnia and Herzegovina in 1997. In Bogota, Colombia (1985-87) he dealt extensively with political and counter-narcotics issues.

Kelly also served as political officer at the U.S. Embassy to the Vatican in the final two years of the Cold War. In Washington, his early assignments included senior Nicaragua desk officer and acting director of European Affairs at the National Security Council.

Ambassador Kelly holds numerous State Department awards, including the Presidential Meritorious Service Award for his work in Chile, and the Secretary of State's Cordell Hull Award for Economics.

Ambassador Kelly holds a B.A. (summa cum laude, Phi Beta Kappa) and Ph.D. from the University of California, Los Angeles, and has studied at Stanford University and the National War College in Washington. He holds a degree from the Ecole Nationale d'Administration (ENA) in Paris and was a Fulbright Scholar in Italy. His languages are Spanish, Italian, French and Portuguese. He and his wife Kimberly Fitzgerald Kelly have two children.

Catherine Loubier

Executive / Advisor

A Montreal native, Catherine Loubier has spent half her career in the private sector and the other half in Canadian politics. Today, she is a sought-after senior advisor to the corporate world on issues ranging from public policy and governance, energy and infrastructure and Canada-United States relations. She is currently based in the U.S.

Catherine began her career in 1996, holding key positions in the private sector advising business leaders in various industry. Starting in 2006, Catherine spent a decade serving in Ottawa at the highest levels of Canadian politics. Most notably, she was Senior Advisor to Canada's 22nd Prime Minister, guiding his government on Quebec affairs and policy. She handled communications for the Minister of Foreign Affairs and for the Minister of Transport and Infrastructure of Canada and was key in organizing and attending official visits around the world, including in the United States, the European Union, Iraq, Afghanistan, India, Russia, the Canadian Arctic and many more.

Following her roles in Canadian politics, Catherine joined the Renault-Nissan-Mitsubishi Alliance in Paris to serve its Global CEO as General Manager of his office, and as Alliance Communication Global Director. In that role, she was a key part of the corporate strategy to positioning the Alliance as leader on electric, connected, and autonomous vehicles. The Alliance then employed nearly 475,000 people in 200 countries.

After directing the 2018 transition for Quebec's Premier's new government and filling the role of Deputy Chief of Staff, in 2019 Catherine was appointed Québec's most senior representative in the U.S., as Delegate General of Québec in New York. In this crucial political and trade role, she led important work to finalize of the largest ever renewable hydropower contract and transmission cross-border project, including a historic State regulatory change in favor of Quebec's clean energy. The contract between Hydro-Quebec and the State of New York is estimated at $20B U.S.

Her work to support several companies from Quebec in the U.S., active in the green economy and seeking access to capital and buyers on the U.S. side, has been praised on both sides of the border. Her leadership to counter the U.S. imposition of tariffs on Canadian aluminium was also saluted. Catherine is a relentless supporter of cross-border trade and wholeheartedly defends Canada-U.S. relationships. She has co-founded the North American Rebound initiative.

She holds a Finance program certificate from the Harvard Business School, and a BA & Master's in Political Science from Université du Québec à Montréal. She is a member of the Women's Forum New York and Board member of the Council for Canadian American Relations.

Joanne Zimolzak

Partner, Dykema

Joanne Zimolzak guides clients in highly regulated industries through the substantive and procedural complexities of commercial litigation. She has a strong will to win at trial and appeal but is sensitive to clients' business concerns. A hard-fought defense verdict can be satisfying, but some of Joanne's most substantial victories happen when she spots problems before the client does and resolves disagreements quickly and amicably.

Based in Washington, D.C., and often appearing in state and federal courts across the United States, Joanne represents businesses of different sizes and industries in breach of contract, non-performance, and non-payment issues. In the insurance area, she helps carriers avoid or reduce significant exposure associated with bad faith allegations and professional negligence claims against insureds. Joanne also assists clients with navigating the federal and state regulatory environment, including litigating before administrative law judges and challenging administrative decisions in state and federal courts.
